

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	v
List of Figures	xi
List of Photographs	xii
List of Tables	xiii
Chapter 1
Introduction	1
1.1 Situating Women and Individual Farming Under Changing Agrarian Landscapes	5
1.2 Women and Individual Farming in Burkina Faso	9
1.2.1 Burkina Faso’s Policies Addressing Access to Land for Women	9
1.2.2 The Field Site	12
1.2.3 Women and Individual Farming in Mossi Studies	20
1.3 Research Questions and Planning	24
1.3.1 Research Questions	24
1.3.2 Fieldwork Organization	25
1.4 Outline of the Book	27
Chapter 2
Understanding Women’s Individual Fields: Epistemological Bewilderments and New Approaches	31
2.1 Women’s Contribution to Household Economies and Agriculture: An Overview of the Main Theories and Approaches	34
2.1.1 From Unitary to “Non-pooling” Households	34
2.1.2 Division of Labor	41
2.1.3 A (Com)Promised Land?	49
2.2 Understanding Women’s Individual Fields Through the Uncertainty Lens	54

2.2.1 Uncertainty and Intentional Action	55
2.2.2 An Approach to Understanding Women’s Individual Fields	58
Chapter 3
“Our ‘Pen’ is the Hoe We Use to Farm”: Negotiating Access to the Field	61
3.1 Doing Fieldwork in Tistenga: Setting the Scene	63
3.1.1 The Host Family	66
3.1.2 The Research Assistants	68
3.1.3 The Female Informants	69
3.2 Research Methods	72
3.2.1 Participant Observation	73
3.2.2 Semi-structured Interviews	75
3.2.3 Survey Questionnaires	77
3.2.4 Compound Sketches and Field Measurements	78
3.2.5 Reflections on the Use of Pseudonyms and the “Promise” of Confidentiality	80
Chapter 4
Allocating and Managing Land in Tistenga: Households’ Livelihood Priorities and Land Use Practices	83
4.1 Land Distribution and Allocation Practices in Mossi Households	85
4.1.1 Household Head’s Fields (zaksoaba-poto)	88
4.1.2 Individual Fields (beolse)	91
4.1.3 Land Allocation within Households	98
4.2 “The entire village is full of hay!” Managing Land under Environmental Challenges	100
4.2.1 Rainfall	102
4.2.2 Soil Types and their Classification	104
4.2.3 Farming Inputs	108
4.2.4 Farmed Crops and their Uses	110
4.2.5 Fields for Food, Fields for Sale	124

4.3 Where Do Gender and Field Categories Meet?	136
Chapter 5
Beolse Stories: Land in Women's Biographical Narratives	143
5.1 Land, Biographies, and the Politics of Storytelling	144
5.1.1 A Thorough Investment: The Story of Nafissata	148
5.1.2 The Unexpected Loss: The Story of Zenaabo	156
5.1.3 The Naked Soil: The Story of Asseta	164
5.1.4 "Discovering" beolga : The Story of Thérèse	172
5.2 Dimensions of (In)Security	179
5.2.1 Social Circumstances	181
5.2.2 Material Circumstances	184
5.3 Beolga and its Evaluative Shifts	186
Chapter 6
Setεεga : Architectures of Provisioning	191
6.1 Exploring Women's Economic Arrangements	192
6.1.1 Beolga , An (Un)certain Ground	193
6.1.2 Other Income-Generating Activities	210
6.1.3 Arranging Activity Portfolios	218
6.2 Staying Grounded While "Keeping the Flow Moving"	228
6.2.1 "Postures": Unpacking Anticipation	228
6.2.2 Cornerstones	230
Chapter 7
Tilε : Of Land and Its Moral Ambivalences	237
7.1 Behind the Norm	239
7.2 "By not giving a beolga you will let her fall": Beolga as a Husband's Duty	241
7.2.1 "They will tell you that you have a household head"	241
7.2.2 "If he doesn't ask, he doesn't love his wife"	244
7.2.3 Narratives of "Love" in Land Negotiations	246

7.3	“Your gain is your gain; your loss is your loss”: Beolga as a Wife’s Duty?	247
7.3.1	“The lazy woman will wander without a cloth to wear”: Narratives of Laziness	249
7.3.2	“You can’t force someone to eat if she’s not hungry”: Diverting Preferences?	253
7.4	Beyond the Norm?	256
Chapter 8
	Conclusion	261
8.1	Summary	261
8.2	New Perspectives on Women’s Involvement in Individual Farming	269
8.3	Recommendations for Policy Makers and Practitioners	274
	References	279
	ANNEX A: Women’s management of beolse based on data relative to rainy season 2017	293
	ANNEX B: Quantity and use of beolse harvests in terms of the yields gathered after the 2016 rainy season	295
	ANNEX C: Management, average gains, and evaluations of income-generating activities which informants were undertaking in the period between November 2016 and October 2017	297